In this book, you will find the intersection of faith, family and career life. How a mid-career couple cope when their seemingly reliable source of income gets suddenly taken away? How do you come out when the travails of life hits your family suddenly and you all lose altitude, just like an aircraft? Is there a point in standing up to your convictions when you become a victim of corporate intimidation?

What is driving the mass emigration of young professionals, sometimes with their families from Africa? What is the experience of the transition like, and how does it test the faith and strength of such families? How do you distinguish between vertical and horizontal career growth paths? How do you make horizontal career growth happen to you with or without promotions and pay rise? How do you avoid self-consuming bitterness and keep growing

How do you blend career and family life in such a way that one supports the other and drives your progress and even find time to give through writings and mentoring others? What happens when your quest to serve the common public fails and is misinterpreted, or even used against you?

Its sums up a heart stopping account of my personal experience working for one of the
